Description:

This presentation focuses on the relationship between substance dependence and changes in youth and family functioning. The presenter highlights the impact of substance dependence on youth mental health as well as parent-child attachment and relationships within the family system. The audience is provided with a critical review of literature as well as treatment recommendations for working with the general population.

Learning Objectives:

After completion of this presentation, participants will be able to name the following:

- 1) Define substance dependence within familial and intergenerational forms.
- 2) Describe impact on parent-child attachment, family systems, and youth mental health.
- 3) Identify supportive psychotherapeutic and family interventions.

Presenter:

Dr. Courtney Molina earned her bachelor's degree in psychology from Southeastern University. She earned her master's degree and doctorate degrees in clinical psychology from The Florida School of Professional Psychology at National Louis University. Dr. Molina completed her internship as well as post-doctoral fellowship with Palm Beach County's Youth Services Department.

Currently, she works at Lakeland Regional Health's Harrell Family Center for Behavioral Wellness, as an outpatient clinical psychologist. In her work, she provides individual and family psychotherapy to people across a range of demographics, and continues to specialize in work with youth, young adults and families.

Dr. Molina is passionate about social justice, advocacy, as well as supporting discriminated peoples and groups.
